I am working in several media right now. You will find my unique, water-coloured, marbled textiles (sold as both fabric and clothing), rock carving, including a fine pounamu collection, and my ongoing photographic work. This year I will be showing my latest project which is merino clothing featuring some of my photos reproduced using digital printing on wool.

I have made many new sculptures recently. I call them totems. They give your garden presence and can also decorate your home inside. And if you appreciate a big range of very light and high quality thrown domestic ware which can go into a dishwasher, oven and microwave then come and see my very inspiring and beautiful studio.

I experience a sense of collaboration with the ideas, materials and energies I work with. (By “energies” I mean things like colour, light, mood, atmosphere.) A sense of play and intuition are paramount, but also a strong discernment. (Is this working? How? How not?) I mostly work with a rich but soft colour palette, contemporary/abstract forms and a range of found objects and recycled materials.

I enjoy painting intuitively, allowing all the colours and layers to form their own story taking me on a creative adventure. It takes considerable effort and some bravery to trust the process and abandon preconceived ideas. I have been painting using acrylics for around 25 years. I explore ideas from my past, present and future, using symbols to represent my ideas. Often one painting will lead to the next, like chapters in a book. Different times in life, however, lead to different stories being told and another book begins, new symbols appear, never completely replacing the old ones. My style continues to evolve.

Art is about expressive intent. When throwing something on the pottery wheel, I feel that part of me is embedded into the piece. Though mature in age, in throwing time I'm very young and still have this desire to explore. A lot of my work is functional art and so typically has a use. There is always a great sense of anticipation when opening the kiln as to how the firing has gone.
